THE MESSAGE WITHOUT A VOICE

PART B

Read this part and answer questions 1-7 on page 2.

I From his bag, Eitan took out a wooden stand. There was blue paint on his fingers. He and his father had finished making it late the night before. Suddenly, Noam understood why Eitan had answered so quickly. “I have never felt so embarrassed about assuming the worst,” Noam said. “But I didn't know for sure.” “My first words were unfriendly,” Eitan replied. “I agree. I have learned that explaining things clearly matters.” For a moment, neither boy spoke. Then Noam moved the books, and Eitan placed the stand in the middle. The welcome sign fitted perfectly.

II Noam still remembered the hurt he felt. A missing sentence did not immediately make that feeling disappear. However, the stand was evidence that Eitan cared about their project. “Helping your brother was important, and I appreciate your coming today,” Noam said. That afternoon, they wrote a short rule for their next project: “If a message sounds strange, ask before you assume.” In other words, three words do not always tell the whole story. As the first visitors arrived, Eitan stood behind the table. Noam moved his own chair beside him. “This one is yours,” he said. Eitan sat down, and they opened the first box together.
