TEACHER KEY - Reading (70 points)

Accept equivalent answers that preserve meaning. Unrecognized open responses remain pending in the app; they are not automatically marked wrong.

1. ii) Why the radio programme was started. (8 points)

Evidence: She wanted to give them another way to be heard. [lines 5–6]

Marking: 8 points for option ii.

Traps: paragraph scope, keyword overlap, unsupported detail

Feedback: The teacher wanted quiet pupils to share their ideas. The paragraph does not explain how programmes are made or how many pupils listen.

2. What they wanted to hear. (8 points)

Evidence: Before their first programme, they asked classmates what they wanted to hear. [lines 8–9]

Marking: 8 points for what classmates wanted to hear / their preferred programme content. Accept equivalent wording.

Traps: question focus, action versus result

Feedback: Give the question the team asked, rather than only the classmates' answers.

3. Choose music; write questions for interviews. (14 points)

Evidence: Pupils who did not want to speak could choose music or write questions for interviews. [lines 11–12]

Marking: 7 points per distinct job. Accept either order. Do not award the same job twice.

Traps: two distinct details, copying unrelated action

Feedback: Choosing music and writing interview questions are two different jobs. Reading the news is not a silent job.

4. i) Why the first interview was difficult to understand; iv) What the team did to improve its interviews. (16 points)

Evidence: two pupils spoke at the same time, so listeners could not understand the guest's answer. After that, the team began practising interviews before recording them. [lines 14–16]

Marking: 8 points for each of i and iv. Select exactly two options.

Traps: two-answer instruction, role reversal, unsupported detail

Feedback: The paragraph gives a problem and the team's response. Checking a programme is not the same as choosing its topic.

Accept equivalent answers that preserve meaning. Unrecognized open responses remain pending in the app; they are not automatically marked wrong.

5. They choose the topics. (8 points)

Evidence: However, the pupils still choose the topics themselves. [line 18]

Marking: 8 points for choosing the programme topics. Preserve who does the action.

Traps: contrast, role reversal

Feedback: The teacher checks programmes; the pupils decide what they are about.

6. iii) She now speaks on the programme although she is still nervous. (8 points)

Evidence: She still feels nervous before a programme, but she no longer avoids speaking. [lines 21–22]

Marking: 8 points for option iii.

Traps: partial truth, time contrast, overstatement

Feedback: Maya has changed her behaviour, but her nervousness has not disappeared. Writing the news was her first step, not her only current role.

7. How to arrange interviews with busy guests. (8 points)

Evidence: Before doing that, the pupils need to learn how to arrange interviews with busy guests. [lines 23–24]

Marking: 8 points for arranging / organizing interviews with busy outside guests. Do not accept just doing more interviews.

Traps: future plan versus completed action, necessary preparation

Feedback: Interviewing outside guests is a plan. Learning to arrange these interviews must happen first.

Calibration and use

Original fictional article: 292 words, 24 sentences, four paragraphs, 24 printed lines. Concrete school vocabulary, mostly simple past and present; contrasts, relative clauses, a passive form and one past-perfect clause.

Qualitatively calibrated against Module C papers; not a validated difficulty score. Seven reading questions total 70 points: 8 + 8 + 14 + 16 + 8 + 8 + 8. The 90-minute practice target follows Summer 2026 A. Duration can vary by sitting.

Hover translations and recorded reading are learning supports in the website. They do not represent examination-room permissions. Trap categories are teaching labels used by this project.

One possible response (80 words)

Last month, I took part in our school's art day. My friends and I painted a wall near the playground. First, we planned a picture of our town. Then we chose bright colours and divided the work. I painted the trees because I love nature. At first, I was worried about making mistakes, but my friends helped me. I enjoyed the activity because we worked together and created something useful. Now I feel proud whenever I walk past the wall.
